Goal Categories for Purposeful Civic Learning

Michigan Journal of Community Service Learning, Summer 2001, Page 40

Academic Learning – learnings that are academic in nature that help students to understand and be prepared for involvement in the community

Democratic Citizenship Learning – learnings related to being an active citizen that prepare students for involvement in the community

Diversity Learning – learnings related to multi-culturalism that prepare students for involvement in diverse communities

Political Learning – learnings related to the political arena that prepare students for involvement in the community

Leadership Learning – learnings about leadership issues that prepare students for community accomplishment

Inter- and Intra- Personal Learning – learnings about oneself and others that prepare students to work better with other citizens

Social Responsibility Learning – learnings that teach people about their personal and professional responsibility to others

Examples of Curricular and Co-Curricular Civic Learning Outcomes

Example of a Curricular Objective: As a part of the Community Health Nursing program, nursing students would utilize their service placements to examine issues related to the American Nursing Association Nursing Code of Ethics. This reinforced knowledge and skills critical to civic competency and propensity, including: advocacy of patient well-being and rights; dedication to serve all patients with respect regardless of economic status, personal attributes, or nature of health problem; and understanding rights and responsibilities of nurses, including advancing the field and the people it serves (i.e. patients' bill of rights). This also included public policy discussions about health-care and the political and/or regulatory agencies involved.

Example of a Co-Curricular Objective: In an attempt to engage members in activities that reinforce civic learning, a major fraternity implemented a program that purposefully connects activities with the group's mission and goals, and includes civic engagement. This process requires student event planners to build reflection opportunities into events in order to meet learning outcomes consistent with fraternal ethics, values, and beliefs. These activities, both formal and informal, allow for students to examine a multitude of civic issues including those related to diversity, leadership, interpersonal communication, and active citizenship. Students are required to indicate which goals from the mission statement are being reinforced by the event and justify how it will benefit student participants socially, academically, personally, and civically. The program proposals, which are completed for everything ranging from community service to public policy/advocacy work, are presented to the fraternity's officers and advisor in order to be approved for implementation.
